PINNED BACK SKIRTS.
[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

This journal, being an ardent champion of the good, the true and the beautiful, feels moved to rebuke the reigning tendency in certain quarters to interpose criticism of the present style of pinning back ladies' skirts. The fashion seems to us to be in many respects admirable, and in no sense absurd or indecent. But where and in what we do not know; but it certainly did not spring, as most fashions do, from a desire to conceal some besetting physical defect. It is conspicuously honest; and it cannot be essentially ungraceful, since it makes dress to follow the natural lines of the last and best work of the creation. We have no patience, therefore, with that purblind refinement of taste which affects to be shocked at the sight of a skirt that clings to the figure with truthful closeness. In both a moral and an artistic view such a mode is infinitely preferable to the cumbersome and dishonest hoops, which a Spanish queen first wore to hide her unequal hips, or the sea-green and India-rubber contrivances which had their origin in the lascivious yearnings of the shallow-breasted belle who flourished in one of the most profligate of modern courts. And, surely, the grotesque device which gives those false glories of curvilinear fullness to the sub-bibb portion of the dresses of the period are not more worthy of tolerance and commendation than a fashion which, as M. Blanc, the French writer on feminine apparel, puts it, "affords a few inches more of woman to a few yards less of drapery."

We would be clearly understood. We would not make Greek Slaves and Lady Godivas of the wives and daughters of the land. But neither would we have them so swathed in clothes as to refute to the common eye all the anatomy of the books, and raise a suspicion that these lovely women are constructed like mermaids, or wrapped about after the fashion of the evasive sprites that stole away the reason of poor Robert Dale Owen. It is reasonable to presume that God knows how to build a woman, and that having finished a piece of work of that kind, and pronounced it "very good," He does not require or desire it to be so adorned that it can only be recognized in its structural grace and beauty by an act of blind and blundering faith. Hence, after these many years of multifarious and unsavable wrappings, we are inclined to regard the pinned-back skirt as a revelation, with the finger of Providence in it, intended to revive confidence in the first chapter of Genesis, and to restore to a cheated and doubting world the old conceptions of the female form divine which the ancients made classic in their history, their poetry and their sculpture.

It does not follow that all display should be sacrificed in this reformatory tightening of the front breadths of skirts. On the contrary, there is still room, and to spare, for all the richness of texture and color that the most affluent can afford. The simple dress in which Homer enfolded Helen—the same that Aspasia and Cleopatra wore—wanted nothing in magnificence by reason of being so fitted as to reveal the outlines of the limbs. Petrarch's Laura had only two dresses for state occasions, both cut to fit the figure almost like a glove; but the plainness of pattern did not prevent their being splendid, with gay, profuse and costly carving of line and trimming. There is no limit, and there should be none, to the possibilities of brilliancy in woman's attire. Only let the spectacle be honest, consistent, harmonious. To quote again from Mr. Blanc's studies in this branch of art—for art it is, of persuasive and fascinating interest—"The face alone is not all of feminine beauty; and it is not too much to say, with one of our greatest latter day philologists, that the woman who but casts a shadow of a graceful figure on the wall confers a favor on the world. Good luck, then, to the pinned-back skirt, which suggests more in the way of wholesome, felicitous reform than all the woman-suffrage schemes that uneasy brains have ever concocted.

How IT APPEARS TO STRANGERS.—A native Japanese journalist, who has evidently traveled in Europe, has published an article on woman's rights in his newspaper, in which he says that "from the practice of Europeans it would appear that the power of the wife is greater than that of the husband, and this error has been brought about by the want of a correct view of the dictates of nature. We would point out examples of this. In going through a door the wife passes first and the husband follows her; the wife takes the best seat and the husband the next best; in visiting, the wife is first saluted; in forms of dress, the wife is first mentioned. Moreover, while men are in the company of ladies they must be particular in their conversation, and are not permitted to smoke without the ladies' permission being first obtained. These and like customs are innumerable, and the power of the women is far greater than that of the men." Now, what have Susan B. and Lizzie Cady to say to this? Will they still contend they are deprived of their rights?
